Subject: Tres Island hot site

What is the status of cleanup and property transfer at Treasure Island, CA?

The Navy transferred the first parcel of property to the City of San Francisco/Treasure Island Development Authority in May 2015. The City received 290 acres of the former Navy site, with plans for mixed use development, including residential, commercial, retail/office space, hotel rooms, a ferry terminal and parks/open space. The Navy continues to work on cleanup at the remaining 200 acres which are divided into five groups of parcels. This summer an extensive amount of fieldwork associated with radiological scanning and removal of radiological materials, including complete excavation and removal of their Solid Waste Disposal Areas, has continued. The Navy cleanup is being conducted under the oversight of the State regulatory agencies. EPA's oversight of the site will decrease after September 30 due to reductions in BRAC funds. The Navy will be seeking clean closure approval from the State after cleanup has been completed. Radiological issues similar to Hunters Point may surface later in the year and early next year at Treasure Island.
